Aerfin, which buys, sells, leases and repairs aircraft, engines and parts, has further extended its investor base by entering the Japanese investor market with the sale of a CFM56-7B engine from the Boeing 737NG family.

The transaction was advised, arranged and structured by Beyoke Capital, specialists in aircraft structured finance, connecting fundraising entities to investors in Japan.

For the Japanese investor, this represents their inaugural venture into the leasing business.

“I am thrilled to announce the successful closing of this transaction for this engine. For Aerfin, this is an exciting ‘first’ for them to be entering the Japanese market.

“For the Japanese investor, this represents their inaugural venture into the leasing business. We are proud to have facilitated this landmark transaction for both parties and look forward to seeing the continued growth and success of all three companies,” said Rion Sato, chief executive officer of Tokyo-based Beyoke Capital.

Beyoke Capital was founded in October 2021.

“This transaction is testament to our commitment to Asia Pacific and strengthens our reach into Japan as a critically important market. The team at Beyoke has been a strategically important partner in bringing us to this marketplace,” said Simon Goodson, chief executive officer at Aerfin.

“All of this follows on from the recent opening of our new office in Singapore and the building of our multi-lingual team there, where we are well-positioned to further expand our network and relationships in this region,” Goodson added.

With the region’s anticipated fleet growth, aligned with the need to strategically manage fleet retirements and transitions, Aerfin says it sees an opportunity to further expand its success in the area and to better serve the needs of its customers.
